Commentary

The K2 Asian Fund returned -0.68% for the month to be -0.62% year-to-date (YTD).

The stalled economic recovery within China continues to weigh on market sentiment for the worlds second largest economy. While key developed economies, led by the US, continue to exhibit resilience in economic momentum and aggregate corporate earnings, many challenges persist for the China as they try to stimulate their economy.

The central bank in China, the PBoC has continued to do a significant amount of the stimulus to date and has been proactively lowering interest rates to help drive a more sustainable recovery. However, both household and business sentiment in China continue to remain weak. This is partly due to the aggressive corporate clampdowns in the March quarter of 2021, combined with the relatively high youth unemployment rate and their notably large property sector challenges.

Beijing is looking to become more innovative and recalibrate and adjust their policy mix to stimulate economic activity. Some longer-term reforms on first glance look pragmatic. This includes China rolling out several economic reforms to address structural issues, including reducing reliance on exports, promoting domestic consumption, and improving their business environment.

However, in the shorter term it has proved difficult to attract global investors for long duration investments. This is clearly a critical area they need to address and the recent open dialogue with US officials is an early and welcomed sign of some commitment to resolve many different trades issues.

Within the broader APAC region, Japan, India and the South-east Asia region (including Australia) will continue attract investors as China works through their reforms.

We continue to maintain underweight exposure to China and an overweight to South-East Asia and Australia. A focus on earnings that export to China continues to be our preferred investment strategy as they look at additional stimulus going forward. The portfolio cash position is marginally higher at 7.8%.
