Commentary

The Asian Fund returned +0.12% for the month. The fund has maintained an underweight exposure to China since early 2021 and is ahead of the index year-to-date (YTD) by +1.0%.

Uncertainty for markets continued due to rising inflation expectations and the implications for US rates. Central bank communication is important for markets and the US Fed has continued to reinforce tighter monetary policy settings ahead from the recent historical lows in rates. This follows their pivot in late 2021 as inflation risks continued to build. In addition to higher US rates, the Quantitative Tightening (QT) will also have an impact for global markets. While addressing inflation risks the US Fed ultimately aims to engineer a soft economic landing.

The positives include the current economic and earnings momentum remaining above long run historical benchmarks (although slowing), compelling equity valuations, sound corporate credit conditions, high household savings rates and the strong labour market. The strong wealth effects create some comfort for policy makers that the tighter monetary policy can be absorbed. The risks include ongoing supply chain bottlenecks, China slowdown, increasing corporate costs, persistent inflation, quantitative tightening (QT) and the ongoing geo-political concerns due to the war in the Ukraine.

The ongoing lockdowns in China, while difficult to reconcile, clearly adds to worsening global supply chain disruptions. Eventually when their economy opens up again, they will need to resume accommodative policy settings which will include further PBoC rate cuts and lowering of their reserve ratios combined with large fiscal stimulus from Beijing. This should be supportive for global growth later this year.

Equity valuations remain attractive for the APAC region. We remain cautious with China exposure following policy uncertainties from Beijing but note that the additional stimulus from the PBoC in 2022 will be required. This will be supportive for the APAC region.

The K2 Asian Fund continues to maintain a low weighting to China since March quarter 2021 but have recently added to some very underweight positions. Our largest weightings include Macquarie Group, Kina Securities, BHP, Taiwan Semiconductors, JD.com and Alibaba. Both JD and Alibaba are new positions. Some of the best performing holdings for the Fund this month were Stanmore Resources, Macquarie Group, JD.com, Kina Securities and Alibaba. Some key underperformers in April include China Resources Beer Holding, Techtronic Industries, JP Morgan and Shenzhou International.
