Commentary

The K2 Australian Fund returned 5.05% for the month.

During the month the ASX 200 Resource and Industrial indices delivered total returns of 14.6% and 4.0% respectively. The Fund has more than 20% exposure to resource companies and has been steady all year. We anticipate that resource companies will continue to deliver strong returns well into 2023. The Fund's resource exposure should benefit from a global trend where commodity producers have generally spent years preserving capital. As a result, the supply of a number of commodities has been constrained. China's eventual roll-back in its zero-COVID policy may be the catalyst that drives commodity demand beyond supply thus leading to upward pressure on prices. Industrial companies should also continue to perform well. The Australian economy could be one of the strongest performers in the developed world over the coming year. The Reserve Bank of Australia (RBA) is less willing to subject the country to unnecessary pain; a self-sustaining economy seems to take precedence ahead of near term inflation readings. Our industrial exposure is directed towards companies that have operational tail winds and are coupled with attractive valuation metrics.

In November, the Reserve Bank of New Zealand (RBNZ) delivered an early Christmas gift to the country's borrowers; the highest cash rate in the developed world. Despite the fact that other central banks are embracing a more moderate pace of rate rises, the RBNZ actually considered accelerating its speed of rate hikes. The RBNZ appears to have a myopic view that inflation expectations are destined to spiral higher and that a recession is the only solution. To our mind, the RBNZ has historically demonstrated limited capacity in anticipating inflationary trends. Hence, we have had the Fund positioned for a more lenient approach to monetary policy. This year the Fund has averaged around 5% exposure to New Zealand based companies. It is likely that the RBNZ will be the first central bank to cut rates in 2023 and this should result in strong performance from the Fund's New Zealand holdings.

The best performing holdings for the Fund this month were BHP Group (BHP), Rio Tinto (RIO) and Seven Group Holdings (SVW) which rose 21%, 24% and 14% respectively. Ryman Healthcare (RYM) and Healthia (HLA) and were the largest detractors. During the month the Fund increased its holdings in National Australia Bank (NAB) and Northern Star Resources (NST). Reliance Worldwide (RWC) was sold.
