Commentary

The Select International Alpha Fund returned -1.50% for the month to be +13.30% year-to-date (YTD) and continues to perform well during a period of market uncertainty. The large overweight to quality Tech (and AI) this year have been strong contributors for the fund.

Policy challenges persist as central bankers navigate headwinds that include taming inflation while engineering a soft landing where possible. There have been some good signs of falling headline inflation in key developed markets over the past few weeks, however, there remains some key concerns with regards to some stubborn core services inflation measures.

The economic slowdown to date has not been as severe as anticipated six months ago. There is a notable resilience the economy supported by a tight labour market. Corporate earnings have also held up to date. The upcoming US quarterly reporting period will give some additional guidance on the quality of earnings and margins. While there are signs of some unevenness within the economy and across many sectors, we anticipate resilient earnings outlook vs expectations despite a higher for longer rate environment.

China continues to disappoint to the downside. Their central bank, the PBOC, continues to stimulate and lower rates (at odds with developed economies) as they try to improve sentiment. Both household and business sentiment in China remain very challenged and some form of Beijing intervention with some reform to compliment the stimulatory PBOC would help as investors continue to remain on the sidelines. The recent more open dialogue with the US on key trade issues is a small positive.

The Fund is managed by the GAM Investments global equity team who are based in Europe, the US and the APAC region. Their active absolute global investment strategy with a focus on disruptive technology has performed strongly and is well placed to take advantage of any spike in global market volatility.

The global Fund overweights to quality Tech (including AI and cloud) have been positive. Key overweights are Microsoft (MSFT), Alphabet (GOOGL), Nvidia (NVDA), Coinbase Global (COIN), Intuitive Surgical (ISRG) and Netflix (NFLX). The Fund remains underweight Consumer Discretionary, Financials and Real Estate.
